Disclaimer:

1. Local government in Queensland has no jurisdiction in relation to the classification or censorship of publications. Rather, this is largely regulated by the Australian Classification Board (ACB) through the Classification (Publications, Films and Computer Games) Act 1995 (Cth), and then supported by the Queensland government through the Classification of Publications Act 1991 (Qld).
2. Prohibited publications are not considered for inclusion in the library collection. A prohibited publication is a publication that the Australian Classification Board (ACB) has classified as a restricted publication or a refused classification ('RC') publication.
3. If you have a complaint about the classification of a particular publication you are encouraged to contact the Australian Classification Board. Additionally, if you think there has been a breach of a classification law in Queensland, you can contact the Office of Fair Trading, who has authority to investigate these breaches.
4. Parents are legally and morally responsible for items borrowed and accessed by their children.
